1 SENATE RESOLUTION

2 WHEREAS, The 1917 East St. Louis Race Riot, also known as 3 the East St. Louis Massacres, was one of the worst race riots 4 in American history; and

WHEREAS, Shortly after America's entry into World War I, when black troops were going to fight to make the world safe for democracy, American black men, women, and children were murdered in the most wanton and barbaric manner in the streets of East St. Louis on July 2 and 3, 1917; and

WHEREAS, In 1917, East St. Louis was crowded with factories and jobs were abundant; but as World War I halted the flow of immigration from Eastern Europe and white workers, increasingly frustrated by poor wages and working conditions were beginning to unionize, factory recruiters started looking toward the American South for black workers; by the spring of 1917, about 2,000 African Americans were arriving in East St. Louis every week in what became known as the Great Migration; as competition for jobs increased, a labor issue became a racial issue fraught with animus and rising tensions; and mid-June; the tensions boiled over on July 2, 1917 following a 1 2 confrontation in a black neighborhood that began after white 3 men in a car drove by shooting into buildings, houses, and churches, and ended with two white police officers dead; and

WHEREAS, Mobs of white men, some assisted by women and even children, set fires in black neighborhoods, trapping people in their homes and shooting those who tried to escape; black passengers were pulled from trolley cars and beaten in the street; black men were dragged through the streets and hanged by light poles along the streets where they remained for days; accounts speak of black men, women, and children beaten with bludgeons, stoned, shot, drowned, hanged, or burned to death, without any effective interference on the part of the police, sheriff, or military authorities; and

WHEREAS, Media accounts state the National Guard was only able to begin to gain control of the crowd on July 3, 1917 when "the rioters had exhausted themselves and sated, in a measure, their lust for blood"; the first full day of calm was July 4, 1917; and

WHEREAS, At the end of the mayhem, nine whites and nearly 200 blacks were dead, more than 300 buildings were destroyed, with fires causing over $8,000,000 in 2017 dollars in damage; 6,000 people fled from their homes; and

- WHEREAS, The East St. Louis 1917 Centennial Commission and Cultural Initiative will be observing the centennial with several activities and events to promote remembrance, healing, and awareness of the 1917 Race Riot and its social, political, and cultural impact on our nation; and to celebrate the great
